I call that a timely and excellent address. Afterwards the good Bishop, being full of Palistine, so lately visited, gave a sketch of his rambles there; very interesting, as a lecture, and with an occasional touch of real eloquence.

Communion afterwards made the service in all three hours. A trial of tediousness to the flesh; but the "Body and Blood" repaid the waiting. But I should gladly have unsaid the Palestinian talk, that any one can read in a hundred books. Allowance must be made for a traveler, however, who naturally thinks his hearers will be delighted wity what has so recently charmed him. A great mistake, but a very common one. I have some dear friends who "wear me out" with "When I was in-From that on I know what is coming. Ob, the weary iteration! I hope I have learned a lesson from it. Who knows himself, though? I have suffered so from others. I would not degenerate into one of these dear bores, if I can help it. Help me, if you see me sliding down the steep declivity; for beyond a certain point the matter becomes rremediable. One goes to the bottom. There is no stopping place.

Bishop Beckwith looks very like my old friend, H. M. Poynter, of the bygones, which drew me to him immediately: The pulpit was strung with roses, which he scattered once and again, unconsciously, in the fervor of his address. They were not well secured. "Flowers of oratory," emphatically, were

ALLLE, the dam of Harkaway, is one of his three greatest daughters. The only horse approaching Rysd. k's Hambleton as a sire producing dams is American. Star, the sire of Lady Brown, the dam of Wilkins Micawher. We know the breeding of HARKAWAY will bear the chiasest analysis and we have every confidence that he will produce speed and we believe those patronizing him will realize as much profit from his produce as from the produce of any horse in the land, and his fillies should make broad mares worthy the embrace of the binest blood. Broad ers are litvited to call and examine for themselves the horse and his produce. Attention is called to the following extract:
